"I have often been amused," said woman the other day, "at the way men both, stop before the mirrors shop windows and arrange their toilets. They seem so fastidious if there is anything out of order, but I often wonder why more mirrors cannot be placed. if they would only tempt people to look at their facial expressions. I rode up town meat ax. Her face would have been good model for some of Dore's heads for the 'Inferno,' and there are hundreds of people we meet every day who ought to have a mirror held before them just once, for they would ever after wonder how they in one of the dry-goods stores to-day, where Then I looked again. The following is from a St. Louis paper of a recent date: Of course you know that sweet love song by Rogers called "At Parting." And how the last verse goes-"The sweetest flower that grows,

I give you as we part; You think it but a rose, Ah, me! It is my heart.'

must tell you a little story apropos of this ballad which a girl wrote me not long ago. It seems that a certain St. Louis bachelor, who owns an effective tenor voice, by and cultivates its dulcet tones when his insurance duties will let him, became engaged to an Indianapolis belle during her visit here in December.

The affair was not announced, however, and people only guessed things from the fact that his attentions were very pronounced. But the maid was fair, and alas! for the tenor's hopes, very, very fickle. She went back to Indianapolis and forgot her St. Louis lover. She not only forgot him. but promised to marry another man, and so last week. When the tenor received her wedding cards, which the jilt was heartless enough to send him, he did not immediately seek a quick death by cold poison or do anything similarly rash and reckless. He merely rolled up his much-worn copy of this love song, with all its tender memories of the many times he had sung it to her, tied about it one perfect American Beauty rose and expressed the whole to Indianapolis, that it would reach her on her wedding day, The bridesmaid who wrote me about the little affair says Miss Heartless Jilt was so affected on receiving the package that she

INDIANA EDUCATIONAL BILL

The Non-State College View of the Legislation Needed.

Hanover College Journal. The immediate occasion of the recent | & struggle over education before the Indiana Legislature was the introduction of the "Geeting" bill. This bill takes its name from the present superintendent of public instruction, who has been its main author, and most conspicuous advocate. The State Teachers' Association approved of some general principles which the pill is said to incorporate; but as it stands it probably could not command the support of the majority of the teachers in the public schools. To many of the features of the "Geeting" bill the nonstate college men have made no opposition. But by certain provisions it greatly increased the advantages, already unfairly given by law to some of the State institutions, and enlarged the powers of the State Board of Education, so that, constituted as that board is, the nonstate col- & lege would be at the mercy of the State institutions as to some very vital interests. For instance, as the law at present stands, a life license is given to a graduate of the State Normal School after two years of satisfactory teaching; whereas, no other teacher, though a college graduate, and of equally satisfactory experience in teaching, can get a life license, except by examina- | $ tion. The Geeting bill proposed to enact further, that: "No person shall be eligible to or shall hold the office of county superintendent unless he hold at the time of his election a life or professional license to teach in the public schools of this State, or a special certificate (to be valid for a period of four years if not revoked by said board), to be called a 'county superintendent's certificate,' issued by the State Board of Education, or has served one full term | 2 as county superintendent in some county of this State immediately preceding his elec-tion; but on the first Monday of June, 1901, no one shall be eligible to the office of county superintendent unless he hold a county superintendent's certificate at the time of his election. The State Board shall have the power to adopt rules and regulations for the examination of applicants for county superintendent's certificates, prescribe in what branches they shall be examined and what qualifications they shall possess to entitle them to receive such certificates. The provision of this section as to life license, favored as the State Normal already is by the law, gave that institution still enormously more the advantage over all competing institutions; and the powers | proposed to be conferred on the State | & Board placed the county superintendents absolutely under that board's control. For, in addition to the enormous power over them, conferred by the section quoted above, another section made extensive provision for the arraignment of a superintendent before the State Board for "incompetency or general neglect of duty," among other causes enumerated. Still another section provided that in the Teachers' Institutes, "no one shall be employed to instruct those attending such institutes unless he has a certificate of qualification issued to him by the State Board of Education." This might be bad enough | $ for the nonstate men, even if the qualitications which the State Board would be bound to recognize were defined; but no such definition is made. These are fair samples of some of the objectionable features of the bill and of its general spirit. Other bills were like unto it. Their introduction into the Legislature brought together the presidents of the non- | $ state colleges, and representative members of their boards of trustees, for conference; and they very early united most harmoniously in demanding two things as to further educational legislation, both of which this journal has in previous issues | X advocated. One is either the elimination of the life-license privilege from the laws concerning the State Normal, or the granting of it on some equitable basts also to graduates of the colleges. The other is the reconstruction of the State Board of Education, so as to omit the presidents of the university, the Normal and Purdue; and in their room the substitution of three others not connected with any of the higher institu- 8 tions. Apart from the "Geeting" bill, the powers conferred on that board are too great to be given to men who are interested in the competition with the nonstate colleges. The following is the sweeping clause which, in the existing laws, confers | $ on that board its powers. Said board "shall take cognizance of such questions as may arise in the practical administration of the school system not otherwise provided for, and duly consider, discuss and determine the same." The "Geeting" bill shows what at least some of the board are anxious to grasp beyond what they already have. The nonstate men are unanimous in their conviction that the Board of Education in its spirit, and to a considerable extent in specific act, conducts its affairs so as to discriminate in favor of the State institutions and against the nonstate colleges. In fact, the membership of the three presidents in that board of itself makes this inevitable.

They could scarcely prevent it, even if they so desired. By various acts, powers, in some cases of such enormous sweep as the whole control of the school-book system, and in others, wholly foreign to the work of the Board of Education, such as the election of state librarian, are conferred upon this body. A careful scrutiny of the statutes of the States show that it is as to its powers unparalleled and unapproached. The nonstate men sought above all else to have the existing laws so amended as to remove the two leading wrongs of which they complain. But they have labored under great difficulties. The repeal of law already in the statutes can easily be defeated even by a minority in the Legislature. In this Legislature also the Senate's committee on education had for its chairman a gentleman who resides at Bloomington, and several other members just as closely identified with the State institutions. While that committee went through the form of a hearing for the nonstate men, the chairman frequently betrayed his animus. No doubt, the majority of that committee would have gladly favored the "Geeting" bill; yet, seeing the impossibility of its passage, they, by simply not pushing any bill, retained for their friends of the board and of the State institution all that the laws already confer on them. The outcome was the early death of the "Geeting" bill. This is a victory for the nonstate men, in so far as it prevents the increased advantages which the proposed legislation would have given to the State institutions. But it leaves the exist- &. ing laws as they were before. In a more general way, much, however, has been accomplished by the nonstate men. For the first time in its history the powerful com-bination with which they have to contend has been defeated. This breaks its prestige of uniform success. The nonstate men also have learned their own power, and, to some extent, how to handle it for their good and that of the people. Public sentiment, too, has been much awakened, and it seems to be overwhelmingly on the side of the non-state contention. If it were practicable, there should be provision made for a good commission, to go over the entire educational legislation of the State. As it stands, this legislation covers more than one hundred pages of Burns's Annotated Statutes, revision of 1894. There should be much elimination and condensation. Fairness should be maintained, so that all good educational work may have equal encouragement. If new legislation is needed, such a commission could propose it in the best shape. But in any case, the nonstate men must continue to agitate until their just demands are heard. If they do not, they will be crushed little by little out of the field, or into insignificance. They need to see that in the next Legislature they have leaders, who not only will listen to appeals for simple fairness, but who will also push their demands, until they are granted somehow in substance. There must be no more committees on education in either branch of the Legislature tied in advance to the interest of the State institutions. This year only the House committee was really open to conviction. The university is unwise in opposing the Wasson's
